Not illustrated. 1874 Excerpt: .the nation. All are subject to the established laws and to the authorities, which they obey without opposition. If there is anything to accuse them of, it is not certainly their intervention in politics, but rather their indifference, and of which they might be pardoned, looking at the peculiar state of the country, as already described. From what we have stated, it is easily deducible that the defect is not in the people, but in the governors, who, counting, as occurs in very few countries, with an almost absolute dominion over the masses, have not known how to give these a proper direction. It would appear that none of the governors have understood their true mission or the wants of the country, for the greater number of their acts have only tended to disorganize the moral and economical order of things. Our congresses have pretended to...
