Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from On the Diminishing Birth-Rate: Presidential Address Delivered Before the British Gynaecological Society, February 11, 1904 In one of the chapters of Mr. Ruskin's well-known book on Political Economy, Unto This Last, he deals with an inquiry into what he calls the veins of wealth. He exposes the fallacy that the wealth of a State lies solely or essentially in material possessions - showing that apparent or nominal wealth which fails in its authority over men, fails in essence and ceases to be wealth at all - that the true veins of wealth are, as he says, purple - not in rock but in flesh, and the final outcome and consummation of all wealth is in the producing as many as possible full-breathed, bright-eyed, and happy-hearted human creatures. In his final chapter, Ad Valorem, Mr. Ruskin writes: There is no wealth but life. That country is the richest which nourishes the greatest number of noble and happy human beings - the nobleness being not only consistent with the number, but essential to it. The maximum of life can only be reached by the maximum of virtue. The principles or truths contained in these passages - passages which bear the strictest examination and criticism - may be, and are, very generally accepted, theoretically. But the history of the nation during the last twenty-five years shows that the principles which govern its real life are altogether different and directly contradictory.
