Army War College : May be obtained from the Publications and Production Office, 2000 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)44369260 Subject: National security -- Europe. Excerpt: . . . mutual economic interests, failed or significantly delayed European economic integration, contraction of economies on either side of the Atlantic, an oil crisis with Europe and t he Unit ed St at es on opposit e sides (especially in conjunction with other economic declines), or intense competition for information-age markets could lead to a 22 trade war. Undoubtedly, cooler heads would ultimately prevail, but damage could be extensive, hindering the attainment of desired outcomes for Europe. Political Hurdles. The greatest political hurdles to achieving our vision of the future Europe stem from the reversal of representative government in Central and Eastern Europe (e. g. , as has happened in Belarus). The most obvious case is Russia, but Ukraine follows in close order. Moderate-sized states like Bulgaria and Romania also could hinder European integration if their countries reverted to authoritarian rule. As the ongoing conflicts in the Balkans demonstrate, authoritarian regimes in even small countries can adversely influence the entire European security climate. Should this occur in Central or Southeastern Europe (e. g. , Czech Republic or Hungary, and Bulgaria or Romania, r espect ively), t he shock waves would r ever ber at e 23 throughout most of the Continent. Another potential political problem concerns the erosion of state sovereignty, which could emerge from several causes. Multinational organizations, such as the EU, NATO, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) could take on aspects of traditional state responsibilities for economics,...
