To continue, until otherwise ordered, the preliminary injunction prayed for in the third clause of the plaintiff s prayer, is to preserve the status of the parties and the evidence upon the grounds, until their respective rights are ascertained. To dissolve it in the absence of specific evidence of location is to disturb their status after years of at least apparent acquiescence, and to transfer possession of the locus in quo from the plaintiff to the defendants before the right to such possession is ascertained. The object of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the subject of the controversy in the condition it is in when the order is made. It cannot be used to take property out of the possession of any one...
